

Photo series:

One barrier to saving trees on a construction site: using drywells or structural stormwater management practices. This can be avoided. Trees retained on-site can become part of Environmental Site Design in Montgomery County.

In the next photo, a site in Bethesda is excavated to make room for drywells to management stormwater runoff.

Drywell being set up.

The space for a drywell on a site.

A drywell in place.